ARCHITECTURE & INTERIORS

Candela is the result of the extraordinary, environmentally conscious vision of Architects Salvador Macias and Magui Peredo of Estudio Macias Peredo. An homage to Tulum's ancient Mayan culture in both look and feel, boutique buildings present a compelling juxtaposition that merges past with present day. It's this rare duality—pyramidal-shaped structures resembling ancient archeological ruins blending in harmony with fresh, contemporary interiors—that creates an authentic, modern living experience that honors the history of Tulum.

SUSTAINABILITY

Candela sits within a new area earmarked by the Mexican government for high-end, low-density development, ensuring privacy and views will be preserved for generations to come. Encompassing 2.5 acres of land with more than 70% being preserved, Candela sets a new standard for forward-thinking, environmentally sensitive, resource-efficient residential design in Tulum. From the initial concept of the master-plan to developing permaculture guidelines, Candela has gone to great lengths to protect its precious surroundings.

Constructing a Sustainable Community

IMP LEMENTING ENVIRONMENTAL INITIATIVES Candela was inspired by ancient Mayan culture, with boutique buildings rising up vertically through natural surroundings in a pyramidal formation to minimize the jungle footprint. With low-density at the core of the community's plan, each of the 12 boutique buildings come to life under strict building and construction practices, including eco-friendly building materials, setting limits for the acceptable distance of freighted materials, and designing efficient uses of walls and windows to naturally lower indoor temperatures and minimize energy consumption. Environmental initiatives have also been implemented, from installing water treatment facilities to creating strict waste management protocols.

UTILIZING PERMACULTURE PRACTICES Candela will oversee permaculture practices, including organic gardens and composting exercises, to influence a more regenerative, self-sufficient community system. Owners and guests will enjoy the benefits of these integrated, inclusive actions through access to locally grown, organic foods and beverages, all hand-crafted with natural ingredients and herbs from the surrounding lands.

ESTABLISHING MEANINGFUL PARTNERSHIPS Candela supports local communities through developing economic and social partnerships. No detail is without purpose at Candela, ranging from sourcing locally made, biodegradable products crafted by local families to offering opportunities for guests to experience Tulum in a more authentic, culturally supportive way that is not often accomplished when establishing tourism programs.
